Hey Husna

A Learning Technologist can obtain profession recognition from a professional body. The professional body is the Association of Learning Technologists and the recognition is Certified Membership of the Association of Learning Technologists (CMALT). To do this a Learning Technologist must make a portfolio (and they also must make a big song and dance about it).
For your first task, whilst I am away I want you to read the documents pertaining to the portfolio here .

Once you are fully aware of how it works and what is expected of you I want you to sketch a rough plan of the domains (1a, 1b etc) and what from your career to do date, if anything, you would talk about and what evidence you could provide to support you submission. Do this in PebblePad as it will help your skill progression in this area. Share it with me when you are happy you have done what you can.

Doing this now will help me orientate myself to your skill set, experience and your needs training and development wise. It will also help me tailor work allocation to support your portfolio development.

Yours
